

EDUCATION & TRAINING FOUNDATION

This innovative leadership development programme is for anyone in Further Education who needs to work in partnership. It's about how you lead when you're working with people from across different organisations and sectors, and you need to lead, but you're not in charge!

Making your voice heard

This practical programme is designed to help you when there's no simple lever to pull for things to magically happen; when you're not the most senior person in the room; where you need to influence how people think and behave; and where you need to work in real collaboration and partnership.

Working and leading differently

The programme is based on tried and tested tools and techniques you can try out to help you start to work - and lead - differently; build relationships and trust; align your goals so that people start pulling in the same direction; and make some real progress in working across other departments, organisations and sectors. It's also grounded in practice, so you can apply these approaches to real-time issues that you're facing.

Programme Leads

The programme will be led by Di Neale from the Leadership Centre, and ETF Associate Barney Angliss. Both are specialists in strengthening leadership across public services, including education, and they ran the successful SEND version of this programme earlier in 2019.

This programme is for you if you're:

- A middle or senior manager in an FE College.
 - A middle or senior manager working with the FE sector in a local authority
 - Working in an Independent sector training provider
 - Working in a community organisation with an interest in vocational education
- A middle or senior manager working in SEND
